

CLARA HAYES | @CLARA.HAYESAI

The No-Flag Checklist

What got my AI posts marked as AI, and what I do instead

I built a faceless character, posted her, and watched post after post come back with an AI label on it. I stopped for a while after that. This is the check I run now, before anything goes up. It takes five minutes.

1. The three tells

- A photo-real face. A face that looks like a photograph of a real person is the fastest way to get marked, and the fastest way to get scrolled past. Everyone has seen a hundred of them.
- A watermark, or the same pose every time. Anything the tool left in the corner, or a character who stands in the same light at the same angle in post after post.
- The small details. Hands, jewellery, teeth, and any text in the background. That is where a generated picture gives itself away. Zoom in on all of it before you post.

2. The fix for each one

- Run the character through VectorPress. She comes out as artwork rather than a photograph, and artwork reads as something a person made. Use that version as your profile picture and as the look of every post.
- Mix the formats. A talking video, a carousel of text, a single picture. Twelve posts from the same tool on the same day is what looks low effort.
- Say it openly. My handle says ai and my captions do too. You are not passing anything off as real, so the label stops being something to hide and becomes a fact about the account.

3. Your profile picture

- It comes first. It is the first thing the platform and the people both look at, and it is the one most people forget. Put the vector version there today.
- Then clear out the old ones. Go through your last nine posts and check each one against part one. Anything that looks like a photograph of a real person comes down or gets replaced.

4. What a flag actually costs you

A label is not a ban. Nobody switches your account off for having AI in it. What gets a post held back is looking low effort, and that is a caption problem as much as a picture problem. A marked post that people watch, comment on and reply to still travels. So do not delete a post because of a label. Ask the question that matters instead: would a stranger stop and watch this?

Five minutes, before the post goes up rather than after it. That is the whole check.